Paragraphs 86 and 87

Replace the existing text by the following:

86. Mr. DARATZIKIS (Observer for Greece) said that the Observer for Turkey had found it appropriate to try to divert attention from the heavy responsibility of his country vis-à-vis the Cyprus issue. He had repeated his all too well-known allegations against Greece in a hopeless effort to efface the findings of both the United Nations Commission on Human Rights and the European Commission of Human Rights, as well as the very many resolutions of both the General Assembly and the Security Council. Serious matters relating to occupation, settlement policy and missing persons could not be resolved by putting the blame on the other side, through false and groundless arguments, but only by Turkey's implementation of the pronouncements from all quarters and of the resolutions of the United Nations, in accordance with the Charter.

87. Turning to the status of the Muslim minority in Thrace, he said it was not surprising that, given all the freedoms and guarantees it enjoyed, that minority was thriving. Having numbered 80,000 people at the time of the signing of the Treaty of Lausanne, it had now reached 120,000. Against that brilliant picture, the performance of Turkey remained very poor indeed. The number of Greeks living in Istanbul had dwindled from 150,000 in 1923 to 3,500, due to the well-known Turkish practices against that particular group of the population.
